

Project Update: August 2013

Learning, and getting inspired, by their peers

When we witness what others are able to accomplish, we are more likely to follow their steps and leap into new projects ourselves. Thanks to the Rufford-funded presenters at our Annual Herder's Forum in August 2013, the herders of Khomyn Tal had just that type of experience. Representatives from the Arkhangai Yak Cooperative shared how dozens of herders work together to sale over a ton of baby yak wool annually to France. The herders of Khomyn Tal realized what they could gain by becoming better organised. In September 2013, local officials will meet to decide how to collaborate in order to more efficiently access global markets for the sale of their high quality baby camel wool. Association Takh looks forward to participating in such an initiative.
