

Project Update: March 2017

The data collection, review and analysis is almost complete for the project and the principal investigator is currently in the process of completing the final report for submission to Rufford Foundation.

However, the detailed final report will be submitted later as preparation of a manuscript is currently in the process as well.

So far, the analysis from the report suggests that the clouded leopard is threatened by some levels in Royal Manas National Park due to habitat destruction and disturbance. The limitation of the study has been an adoption of a generalised method for threat assessment and so, the PI recommends the use of more sophisticated techniques in the future to assess threats which have been identified by the present study.

