

Project Update: May 2015

The importance of sharks: From science to the villages

This video was made during the last months of the project “Conservation and management of reef sharks in the Western Indian Ocean through scientific and local community collaborative actions” to show the main aspects of our work. The main aim of this video is to use it in the work of fisheries scientist and conservationists with Swahili communities, using the example from northern Mozambique.

The workshop “Fisheries and Conservation of sharks”

A workshop on the project “Conservation and management of reef sharks in the Western Indian Ocean through scientific and local community collaborative actions” was held in Pemba, Universidade do Lúrio, on 15th April 2015. The event brought together people from the province with different backgrounds, from fishermen to managers, from students to NGOs, people speaking about fisheries, sharks and the importance of protecting these beautiful animals. The play of the project video was the highest moment of the workshop. The video DVD was distributed by the organisations present in the event.

Links:

High resolution video English/Swahili - https://youtu.be/P6w8nre_8kk

Low resolution video Portuguese/Swahili - <https://youtu.be/uX7rTAqULMM>