

Project Update: December 2016

Reforestation programmes have been carried out in Ghana for some time now. In the past, farmers have been used to carry out reforestation projects which most of the trees have reached maturity and even been harvested. But how farmers can be involved in reforestation projects giving them the right to inter-plant trees with their food crops and how their livelihoods can be improved and sustained through reforestation projects is lacking concrete evidence in Ghana. This project will demonstrate how farmers can effectively be involved in reforestation projects and sustainably improve their livelihoods through the project.
