

Project Update: March 2014

Participatory Video

The idea behind participatory video is that making a video is easy and accessible and is a great way of bringing people together to explore issues, voice concerns or simply to be creative and tell stories. This process can be very empowering, enabling a group or community to take action to solve their own problems and also to communicate their needs and ideas to decision makers and/or other groups and communities. As such, participatory video can be a highly effective tool to engage and mobilize marginalised people and to help them implement their own forms of sustainable development based on local needs.

In this project people were trained to use a camera then they were asked to make videos related to human-tiger conflict in their area. This activity has been done on January 2014.

Left: Giving a general idea about human tiger conflict to the community. Right: They try themselves to make a video
