

Project Update: February 2012

Since the interim report I sent you in December 2011, we've done 12 survey trips with local fisher folk, participated in more meetings and workshops regarding the development of a marine protected/managed area in and around the project site, and done a children's environmental educational workshop at the Punta Banco School. The project, its research team and its volunteers have been great and the support and momentum we're gathering has been very rewarding both from a community development aspect as well as for me personally. We'll finish things up at the end of April 2012 and then start working on data analysis for the final report.
